Mitt Romney Visits IHOP Presidential Hopeful Makes a Stop on Campaign Trail to Greet Fans

Gabby Castaneda
Staff Writer

In a sleepy little Sacramento IHOP, located near Arco Arena, mayhem erupted after presidential candidate Mitt Romney visited. While the media swarmed the property, bodyguards struggled to maintain order as excitement grew from his supporters.

Romney visited with various customers throughout his visit, stopping at booths to discuss topics ranging from sports to politics to pancakes. Romney even affectionately kissed a baby boy while posing for a picture with his proud mother. Many people were surprised by the overwhelming standards to compete with other countries quickly on the rise, "We are facing many challenges, but America has always overcome these challenges in the past, and I am confident that we can do so again." The remainder of his quotes stemmed from this basic principal, which frustrated reporters looking for more information to augment their stories. His vague answers left many less than satisfied.

He answered a mere three questions before being whisked away to another event. He did, though, have a chance to talk about the Mets with some fans at IHOP. He also pleased his supporters. Two little girls were there with their parents and had "Mitt Romney for
